- Washington Monthly College Guide
http://www.washingtonmonthly.com/college_guide/
The Washington Monthly editors rank colleges based on whether they are "producing cutting-edge scientific research and PhDs," sending graduates into public-service jobs, and recruiting economically disadvantaged students and helping them graduate. Not surprisingly, there's not a lot of overlap between their top schools and those in the US News rankings
- 100 Helpful Web Sites for New Teachers <http://www.teachingdegree.org/2009/06/21/100-helpful-websites-for-new-teachers/> Classes have just started in many school districts and many new teachers are already getting a sense of what their coursework didn't prepare them to deal with. They'll find social networks and forums here, where they can ask their questions; they'll also find sites for videos, freebies, using technology, blogs and Twitter in the classroom, and all-purpose sites aimed specifically at them

- Kids.gov - the Official Kids' Portal to the U.S. Government

<http://www.kids.gov/>

Virtually every government agency has created pages for kids explaining their own areas of specialization - space science, marketing, careers, fitness and exercise, national parks, how laws are made, etc. Search for them here, or browse by grade level or by sites for educators

- Science News for Kids

<http://www.sciencenewsforkids.org/> includes not only news, but puzzles, games, and challenges to help kids understand the science. There's also a Science Fair Zone, a Lab Zone for hands on science opportunities, and a Teacher Zone

- Research Blogging
